内容概要

According to Buddha "the whole world is in a flower." How much more true is this for a complicated human with no self-understanding, especially when behind the writing might lie a personal world of spectacle or darkness, a sunny or a depressed heart.

This kind of curiosity led me to the cultural jungle. Every interviewee was a unique, colorful vista. I had the honor to approach, question, listen to, and understand them; to see close up the wrinkles on their faces, the color of their hair, their eyes

Every one of them was a museum packed with precious things. Entering their space, reading and studying them provided nourishment beyond words.
