内容概要

《中国文摘》（China Digest）是中国共产党创办的第一份向海外发行的英文期刊，1946年底在香港正式出版。

这家期刊由龚澎等人主编，及时向全世界报道中国大陆上的激烈斗争，报道解放战争的消息，刊登延安的时事评论，揭露蒋管区的民不聊生和白色恐怖。

刊物上还刊登了毛泽东等人一些著作的英文翻译，其中有的是毛泽东作品最早的英文版，如《中国革命和中国共产党》，于1949年刊登在第5卷第9-11期上。

该刊对帮助世界人民了解中国共产党所进行的正义事业和中国的革命形势起到了极大的作用，为党史及新闻史研究者提供了宝贵的一手资料。

章节摘录

插图：The choice of a Nanking representative to keep contact with MacArthur's Japan. can find none better than Chang Chun who knows and believes in a new "East Asia Co-prosperity Sphere," since he had been a loyal advocate of the old one. Although he claims that the visit will be strictly a personal trip to a country which he has not seen for twelve years, press reports and comments in China decide that he has an official mission. What this official mission will be is not difficult to conjecture. Confronted with difficulties in practically all walks of life, Nanking holds to the last straw of American aid. Nevertheless, American aid in the last two years has proved futile in preventing Communist advances. What the most effective form of aid granted to Nanking should be has been under much discussion in America. William C. Bullitt, writing for the Life Magazine, has boldly suggested that MacArthur should divide his time between Nanking and Tokyo to jointly direct China and Japan's administration. There was a time when American politicians believed that by supporting an opposition group to Chiang and effecting a few reforms within the framework of the old system, a regime subservient to American interests might be perpetuated. It culminated in the election of General Li Tsung-jen as Nanking's vice president, in the grant of large sums of money to Jimmy Yen's "rural re-construction" plan, in direct U.S. assistance to the various generals who are not Chiang's own men, and in the time-to-time attempts to split the anti-Kuomintang forces. Meanwhile, Communist military victories and popular revolt against the Kuomintang regime extend. It clearly becomes an emergency case in which America hesitates to wait to reap the fruits of her endeavours to make Nanking at least appear as a democratic and independent country. In other words, with the steady deterioration of the Nanking Government almost in direct proportion to its American aid, America takes the accent off "reform" and puts it on dire serviceability. The Sino-American bilateral agreement signed in June testifies to this new trend.
