Every football fan will tell you that "football is more than just a game." I believe they are right, and this year's World Cup showed people why. Football brings us together, whoever we are, we can often turn enemies into friends. When people think of Africa, they think of its problems. But the World Cup in South Africa, the first to be held on this continent (大陆), showed the world another side of Africa. Football lovers saw a lot more than just their favorite players at South Africa's brand new stadiums: South African culture, love and hospitality (好客) will also be on show. Jacob Zuma, President of South Africa, knows how important the World Cup is for his country; "It will forever change the world's perception (看法) of South Africa -- it is in our hands to make this the best World Cup ever," he said. History tells us that football can also heal wounds and help world peace. In 1998, the United States played Iran in the World Cup in France. Despite (尽管) the great cultural differences between the two countries, they met in friendship on the football field. This year, the thirty-two countries in the World Cup all hope to do the same thing. Everyone enjoyed the festival of football and friendship in South Africa this summer. And if you had been to see one at the South Africa Pavilion at the World Expo, you would have had a unique experience while watching the games.
