<<语篇分析实探>>

内容概要

《语篇分析实探》把语言看作人类社交活动中可通过口头的话语和书面的文本实现相关功能的语言行为，以会话分析、批判性语篇分析、语言学以及社会心理学的话语认知法等为理论框架和研究方法，对各种类型语篇的资料采集、分类整理、角度选择和模式套用、分析过程各阶段相应策略和具体方法的选择取舍、就所做分析的信度和效度进行评估与认定的标准及其科学依据，乃至分析报告的撰写和后续事项，都作了系统、全面的阐述，不仅为语篇分析研究提供了各层面具体操作的实用步骤，也就这些步骤作了详尽的理论阐释，堪称是从事这一领域学习和研究的人员首选的参考书。

作者简介

Linda A. Wood (Ph.D. , York University , Canada) is Professor of Psychology at the University of Guelph. Her research concerns issues of language and social interaction , and discourse and social structure. She has published articles and chapters on loneliness , identity , forms of address , politeness , facework , aging , abuse , and sexual assault. Her current work is focused on discourses of child sexual abuse in legal , scholarly and media accounts , and on the reproduction of gender in discursive practices of address and naming as represented , for example , in expressions such as guys and in surnames. She is a member of the International Association of Language and Social Psychology (IALSP) , the International Communication Association , and the International Pragmatics Association. Roll O. Kroger (Ph.D. , University of California , Berkeley) is Professor Emeritus of Psychology at the University of Toronto. The general focus of his research has been on the social conditions of self-report as found , for example , in personality testing , hypnosis experiments , and everyday self-disclosure , as well as on discursive issues (politeness , facework) . His current work is concerned with the discursive respecification of personality and the social psychology of address forms. He is a member of IALSP and of CHEIRON. The two authors have collaborated since the early 1980s on studies of discourse and on the critical examination of the metatheory and methodology of social psychology.

章节摘录

Examples of Discourse Analysis The spirit of discourse-analytic research is inductive ; that is, it involves moving from the concrete to the abstract, from the particular to the general. In keeping with that spirit, we present in this chapter some examples of discourse-analytic research from which we hope readers will develop a sense of the activities involved before going on to the more abstract discussion of methods and analysis provided in Chapters 4 to 8. The best way to develop that sense is to carry out one's own analysis. The analysis of discourse data is partly a craft, in that it requires skills that cannot be wholly specified in cookbook fashion (take cup of preference structure and fold into 2 cups of interpretive repertoires ; mix well) . But the analyst still requires an acquaintance with examples of discourse-analytic research in addition to a grasp of the general principles of discursive psychology and of the various methodological strategies and resources. Such familiarity is not a substitute for experience ; it is a prerequisite. Research examples not only provide models for analysis ; they also yield information about concepts, devices, practices, and strategies that can be used in analysis.
