章节摘录

Many Americans all across the country only use their computers for word processing duties and to email friends and loved ones. They have tried to log onto the internet but their ultra-slow dial-up modems don't allow them to experience the wonder of speedy and reliable internet connectivity. These people really don't know what they are missing without high speed internet services through DSL, cable modem and satellite internet. With high speed internet users get to experience near instant webpage download speeds and unheard-of levels of reliability. One of the main drawbacks of dial-up internet is the fact that you have to have an extra phone line available or your main line will constantly ring with a busy signal. And who wants to miss all of their phone calls during their time on the Internet?

High speed internet can come into a home or office through cable, telephone or fiber optic digital lines. All of these systems have been shown to possess web-based download speeds that are at least two times as fast as for dial-up. In a time when people barely have time to say goodnight to their children in the evening, why waste precious minutes waiting for websites to load information?

There are some systems out there, just like a number of satellite internet offerings, which offer connectivity that is not that much faster than dial-up. These companies are less about download speed and more about having internet connectivity in remote and rural parts of the country. For them, many high speed internet alternatives are not even an option. For those of us who live in the rest of this great nation of ours, be grateful that you have access to the best in high speed internet access.
