章节摘录

If you dont try to do what you love , if you dont pursue what you think will be most meaningful , you will regret it. Life is long. There is always time for Plan B. But dont begin with it. I think of this as my parking space theory of career choice , and I have been sharing it with students for decades. Dont park 20 blocks from your destination because you think youll never find a space. Go where you want to be and then circle back to where you have to be. You may love investment banking or finance or consulting. It might be just right for you. Find work you love. It is hard to be happy if you spend more than half your waking hours doing something you dont like. But what is ultimately most important here is that you are asking the question not just of me but of yourselves. You are choosing roads and at the same time challenging your own choices. You have an notion of what you want your life to be and you are not sure the road you are taking is going to get you there. This is the best news. Noticing your life , reflecting upon it , considering how you can live it well , wondering how you can do good : These are perhaps the most valuable things that a liberal arts education has equipped you to do. A liberal education demands that you live self-consciously. The surest way to have a meaningful , happy life is to commit yourself to striving for it. Dont settle. Be prepared to change routes. Remember the impossible expectations we have of you , and even as you recognize they are impossible , remember how important they are as a lodestar guiding you towards something that matters to you and to the world. The meaning of your life is for you to make. I cant wait to see how you all turn out. Do come back , from time to time , and let us know.
