章节摘录

In 1970 , a young German schoolmaster had an idea which changed his state of affairs. He decided to turn his little schoolhouse into a dormitory for the summer holidays. Anyone who brought his sleeping bag and cooking equipment along could stay there for a very small quantity of money. The idea was a success. A few years later , the schoolhouse was much too small to hold the many young people who wanted to stay there. As a result , a dormitory was set up in an old castle nearby. This was the first Young Hostel. Today , young students and workers of every country can meet in the hostels and get toknow gach other. When young people arrive at a hostel , they have only to show their card ofmembership in a hostel organisation in their own country. This card will permit them to use thefacilities of hostels all over the world for a very low price. Often , at the evening meal , a group of boys and girls from various parts of the country or the world will happen to meet at the same hostel. They may put their food together and prepare a dinner with many kinds of dishes. Sometimes a program me will be organized after the meal with dances , songs or short talks followed by a question period. One can learn a lot of things a-bout other places just by meeting people who come from those places. For this reason , a few weeks spent "hostelling" can be just as useful a part of ones education as classes in school.
